WHAT TO DO WITH IT!

The country abounds in those who offer free advice to the veterans as to how they may use their long awaited bonus money. Hundreds of luring schemes are held up before the veterans and perhaps even as this is written most of the money is obligated.

The Times Virginian has but one suggestion to offer the veteran and that is this:

Why not give first consideration to using this cash to pay on debt?

Many of the veterans are not in debt to anybody. Perhaps others owe much more than the bonus money can pay. But by and large we know of nothing the veteran can do with do with his bonus that will do both him and society more good than eradicate debt. When he has done that business will talk "turkey" with him on any commodity he or his family may want. If the veteran used his bonus in this direction, we are convinced that the entire nation will benefit. Payment of debt, starts an endless chain that makes the butchey, the baker and the candlestick maker; doctor, lawyer, preacher, farmer, laborer and everyone else a "free" person from the blight of worry. That restores confidence, enterprise and courage. Two billion dollars paid on private debts in America today will start a chain that will cause the bulk of the private debt of the nation to be wiped away. This is no fettered, America would enter its era of greatest prosperity.

SALTY TALK ON POLITICS

The following editorial is quoted from the Norfolk (Va) Virginian-Pilot:

"Councilman Wood was only saying publicly what is common knowledge when he told the Cosmopolitan Club Thursday that 'there are men holding high offices of trust as a gift of the people who are paying poll taxes of voters to keep themselves in office.' It is an old Spanish custom.

"If there were no poll taxes to pay to qualify to vote in Virginia this particular method of helping the voice of the people to become the voice of God would, of course, be locked off, but some other method would take its place as long as the electorate remains that element to which Captain Wood paid his compliments in another passage of his speech—those who vote 'so indifferently' that they are 'really a menace to the community.'

"The problem is one of the toughest in the democratic system. It is not susceptible of complete solution because no form of political organization is conceivable that can convert all office-holders into archangels and all voters into jealously interested guardians of the public service. We have to do the best we can. Part of that task is to tighten up the laws against vote buying. Our present poll tax and mail voting laws are no more than sieves in this respect. Another part of the task is continuous education in the responsibilities of citizenship. A salty luncheon club talk on that point has a place in the educational process."

GOVERNOR ALF M. LANDON

Landon, Knox to Lead for G. O. P.

With Unprecedented Unanimity Republicans Pick Party Standard Bearers.

By WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Cleveland, Ohio.—With a unanimity that was remarkable and very rare in American politics Gov. Alfred M. Landon, of Kansas, and Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, were nominated by the Republican convention for President and Vice President.

But it was a unanimity that was arrived at only after several days of strenuous argument regarding both candidates and platform. An argument that was at times loud but never unfriendly. It was a result the new leaders of the party had hoped for. They expressed themselves as willing to talk it all out, regardless of how long it might take, until every delegate from every state was entirely satisfied. That result was evidently achieved. The platform was approved by the unanimous vote of the convention. Both candidates were nominated by a unanimous vote, and at the end had the support of every other distinguished son of the party who had been a contestant for the places on the ticket.

And the band played:

"Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here."

But if it were to be classed as a "gang," it was a new one. The white or bald heads of previous Republican conventions had given place to black heads. Age had given place to youth. The few silvered heads to be seen were following the procession, not leading it. Youth was the dominant feature of the Republican convention of 1936.

It was a serious-minded gathering of younger men and women. They were taking their politics seriously. Each one, or each group, knew the answers to the nation's problems, and right or wrong, they proposed to fight for their opinions. They were not taking orders. They recognized no bosses. Each was there to do a job as he or she believed it should be done.

Such a condition—a condition I had never seen before in a third of a century of attending national political conventions—quite naturally produced an argument.

It involved the platform even more than who the candidates should be. The East and West did not see alike on many subjects. The corn belt differed with both the East and West. Delegates from each section saw the national problems as they applied to their section, and youth in politics had not yet learned the necessity of compromise. It resulted in emphatic, but not unfriendly, argument, and meant long hours for the resolutions committee.

Long Hours on the Platform.

The convention was scheduled to open at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning, but the gavel of Chairman Fletcher did not call the great assemblage to order for an hour after that time. The first session was short, and consisted only of the appointment of the convention committees including those on credentials, rules, resolutions and permanent organization.

The resolutions committee went into session at once with the expectation of reporting a platform by Wednesday night. It was then that most of the argument began. All afternoon of Tuesday and well into the night individuals, organizations and factions were presenting platform planks—more than half a hundred altogether. Everybody who wished to present an idea was heard, and every idea had one or more proponents on the committee. Each member of the committee, it seemed, had ideas for one or more planks or for complete platforms. Through Tuesday night, through Wednesday, Wednesday night and all day Thursday the committee labored over what was to be the policies of the Republican party for 1936.

Senator Borah was especially insistent upon a number of points including money, foreign relations and monopoly. On the money question the committee, in the end, refrained from any mention of gold, but after the adoption of the platform and before the nomination Governor Landon very definitely read gold into his interpretation of the platform.

After 18 long hours of labor the resolutions committee brought to the convention a platform on which all members of the committee had agreed, thus precluding any possibility of a fight on the floor of the convention, and which the delegates unanimously accepted.

Condemns the New Deal.

Quite naturally the platform condemns the present administration for practically everything it has done. It charges that the administration has dishonored American traditions; the usurpation by the President of the powers of congress; the violation of the rights and liberties of American citizens; the flaunting of the integrity and authority of the Supreme court; the passage of laws contrary to the Constitution; repudiation of national obligations; the creation of a vast number of new offices, and the filling of these with political favorites, setting up a centralized bureaucracy; the making of secret tariff agreements that have flooded American markets with foreign products; It has appealed to passion and class prejudice, and many other things that are viewed with alarm.

COL. FRANK KNOX

Party Pledges.

The first pledge in the platform promises to maintain the American system of government; to preserve the American system of free enterprise, free competition and equality of opportunity.

On the subject of relief it proposes the return of responsibility to non-political local organizations, with federal grants to the states and territories so long as the need is urgent.

The platform condemns the present old age and unemployment insurance laws and promises to replace these with laws that are workable, and that will provide for all the adult populations.

On the subject of agriculture the platform charges the New Deal with failing to itself the Republican principle of soil conservation and the retirement of sub-marginal lands, and approves of these things. It proposes to foster and protect the family type of farm, and to promote policies that will bring about an adjustment of agriculture to meet the needs of domestic and foreign markets. It proposes to facilitate production and increased consumption on a basis of abundance instead of scarcity, and proposes several definite means of doing that.

Other subjects covered in the platform relate to re-employment, labor, tariff, monopolies, civil service, government finance including a stopping of government waste and balancing the budget, money and banking and other things.

The real highlights of the convention came on Wednesday and Thursday nights. On Wednesday night President Herbert Hoover addressed the assembled multitude that filled, every foot of space was occupied. The tremendous demonstration that greeted Mr. Hoover when he stepped to the front of the platform, a demonstration in which Chairman Snell nor the president could stop for more than minutes, and another lasting for an hour at the close of the address, thoroughly illustrated the hold the former president has on the Republicans of America. Mr. Hoover delivered a terrific arraignment of the New Deal, and aroused his audience to a very high pitch of enthusiasm, not in any way indicating any preference as to the party candidates or any desire to influence the decisions of the convention.

Hoover Gets Ovation.

Mr. Hoover arrived at the station Wednesday morning and as the train pulled into the station by a vast multitude of people who gave him a remarkable ovation. All through the streets of the city thousands crowded the sidewalks for the privilege of a hand shake with the marked Herbert Hoover and the Republicans of the country. When the nomination of Governor Landon was announced Thursday night Mr. Hoover was on the titular head of the party, and he retains the affection and confidence of the party.

On Thursday the committee met twice and immediately got down to work awaiting the report of the resolutions committee. It was not until late in the evening when the report was received, was read and then unanimously approved with a rousing cheer.

The bombshell of the convention and there is usually at least one, came just after the adoption of the platform, and with the name of John Hamilton who was to be Governor Landon. Mr. Hamilton received a telegram from Governor Landon reading as follows: "In my interpretation of some of the planks in the platform. The platform is a sound statement of principles and constitutes a sound campaign document. As I view it, is a currency question in terms of gold, and contains the word gold."

Any mention of gold in connection with anything Senator Borah has been opposed, and there is no doubt but that he read into the platform the suggestion contained in Governor Landon's telegram. Governor Landon's interpretation of some of the planks in the platform. The platform is a sound campaign document. As I view it, is a currency question in terms of gold, and contains the word gold."

Any mention of gold in connection with anything Senator Borah has been opposed, and there is no doubt but that he read into the platform the suggestion contained in Governor Landon's telegram. It did without a roll call of the states, and with practically every delegate in the convention afraid to do.

In the same telegram Governor Landon made his own interpretation of other planks in the platform. If necessary, he said, a constitutional amendment could be secured he might legislate for minimum wages and maximum hours for women. This statement referred to the plank in which he pledged himself to oppose the inclusion of every person in the administrative service under the provisions of assistant secretaries of labor, postmasters of the entire Post Office department.

Then came the nomination of the vice president.

Board Bandies Ballot.

Through a week process of selecting of the convention leaders of the Landon, Knox, Borah, Hamilton, Hamberg and Dickinson committees had been in charge of the support for their candidates. There had been an effort made to head off the support of the vice presidential candidate against Landon, who was said to be claiming a nomination of his own. On Thursday afternoon the vice presidential candidate climbed into the Landon bandwagon, released their delegates recommended that they vote for Governor Landon, and followed the nomination speech of John Hamilton, Landon manager, Senator Borah, Senator Dickinson, Colonel Knox and others who came to the platform to second the nomination of the governor.

There was no roll call. The nomination of Governor Landon was acclaimed by a viva voce vote. The vote was heard throughout the hall, and the Republican party was ready to announce its choice of a candidate for vice president of the United States.

The demonstration that followed the first mention of Governor Landon's name by John Hamilton was more than half an hour.

With the exception of the nomination of a Vice Presidential candidate, there was over in the early hours of Friday morning. While the delegates and the audience did not know it, the convention had adjourned sine die at ten o'clock Friday. Shortly after 1 time a roll call of the states for the naming of Vice Presidential candidates. As usual they were given the opportunity to make a nominating speech. As usual the convention that became impatient as each state presented any hope of a speech. Michigan was strong for Senator Vandenberg, but the moment he announced, as he had done before, that he would not accept the nomination, while at the same time making his determination known for the success of the ticket, the demand of those named in his behalf for speeches withdrew. Then came the roll call, and on that call each delegation cast its solid vote for Frank Knox, a unanimous vote that had been that of Governor Landon.

Within a few minutes the show was over and the nomination and election of the ticket had been made. The next step will be next November.

Appomattox CCC Camp News

Camp Lee Grant was ably represented on the amateur program sponsored by the local chapter of the U.D.C. at the Appomattox high school auditorium on the evening of June—21 by enrollees Frank Tracey, Harry Hags, Scott Thompson and 'Dusty' Gregory. The jump number was opened by the team of Higs and Gregory in an instrumental act. Then followed a vocal number by Gregory, with eye and foot work by Hags as Shirley Temple. This served to introduce the Shirley Temple special, with Hags, dressed in an old fashioned hoop skirt, ruffled pantaloons, and other accessories to match, impersonating Shirley. The act was concluded with Scott Thompson as Mrs. Lee Grant, in an exhibition of foot work which compared favorably with the offerings of professional hoofers. And then Jime Tracey, the popular comedy clerk, with a vocal solo which went over in a big way. The spontaneous applause which followed Tracey's offering of 'All My Life' prompted, for the moment, like the beginning of the Hoover demonstration at the recent Republican convention. These same enrollees will be seen again Monday night at the Appomattox high school auditorium in the two Wmanless Wedding which is being presented by the members of Company 2391.

The members of Company 2391 will present on Monday, June 29, at 8 P.M. in the Appomattox high school auditorium, The Womanless Wedding. This production promises to be one of the outstanding dramatic offerings of the season, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Frank Tracey, of Ambridge, Pa., who has for the past three months served as Company Clerk at Lee-Grant Camp, has received notice to report at the Army Recruiting Office at Richmond, on Monday, June 29, for a physical examination prior to entering the United States Preparatory School for West Point. Enrollee Tracey's services while in camp have been so satisfactory that his application carries the endorsement of both Sub-District and Company Commanders.

All the boys who have been visited since school closed have made an excellent start and all records are up to date.
